To Whom It May Concern:

I am reaching out because agencies today are facing an increasing demand for clinicians who can effectively treat trauma, PTSD, moral injury, and chronic stress in a way that is both clinically grounded and sustainable for the therapist. EMDR has become one of the most sought-after trauma treatment modalities, yet many clinicians leave trainings still uncertain about how to confidently apply it in real clinical practice. My goal is to provide EMDR Basic Training that moves beyond simply teaching a protocol and instead helps clinicians truly understand trauma, build confidence in the therapy room, and feel prepared to responsibly integrate EMDR into the populations they serve every day.

My name is Derrick Martin, LPCC S, and I am an EMDRIA Approved Trainer affiliated with EMDR Cleveland. What often sets my trainings apart is the depth of experience I bring into the room. Before becoming a psychotherapist, I spent years working in public safety and law enforcement as a paramedic, firefighter, and police officer. Those experiences gave me firsthand understanding of crisis response, cumulative stress exposure, grief, trauma, and the emotional toll carried by those in service-based professions. Today, I specialize in working with trauma survivors, first responders, military personnel, veterans, and couples navigating PTSD, complex trauma, and overwhelming life experiences.

Because of this background, I teach EMDR from both a clinical and lived perspective. Clinicians are not simply learning information. They are learning how to confidently and ethically work with trauma in real clinical settings. My trainings blend accessible neuroscience, real case application, discussion, live demonstration, and hands on practice to help therapists integrate EMDR into their work in a meaningful and sustainable way.

I also place a strong emphasis on creating a supportive and engaging learning environment where clinicians feel comfortable asking questions, practicing new skills, and building confidence throughout the training process. My goal is for therapists to leave not only understanding EMDR, but feeling empowered to begin using it responsibly and effectively with the populations they serve.

I would welcome the opportunity to speak further about how EMDR Basic Training could support your clinicians and the clients your agency serves. I believe agencies deserve a trainer who understands both the clinical and human side of trauma work and who can help therapists leave training feeling capable, supported, and ready to apply what they have learned.

Please reach out to me to discuss future trainings with your agency and the various options for training that are available.

Respectfully,

Derrick Martin, LPCC-S, CEMDR, NPT-C
